East Germans Stage NATO Sit-Ins in 2 More Bonn Embassies

By William Drozdiak

BONN - East Germans seeking asylum have occupied the West German embassies in Warsaw and charest, West German officials seid Friday.

The latest sit-ins are expected to complicate efforts to resolve the case of more than 160 East Germans who have taken refuge for several weeks inside the West German embassies in Prague and Bu-

Officials did not say how many East Germans were in the Warsaw and Bucharest missions or how long they had been there. Reuters

The refugees have asked for assurances that they will be allowed to emigrate once they agree to leave the embassies. East Germany has refused to offer any guarantees, ap-parently in the belief that any capitulation to the demands will en- routes to the West. But the refugees courage other desperate citizens to emulate the tactics.

In the past, when East Germans sought asylum by occupying West German diplomatic missions in East Berlin or Prague, they were quietly permitted to go to the West after protracted negotiations in which the Bonn government paid out as much as $20,000 per person to secure their release.

But the East German govern-ment has taken a tougher position during the Prague sit-in, a develop-ment that some officials in Bonn attribute to greater pressure from Moscow for a more hard-line policy on emigration.

The East German government has said the refugees will not be punished if they return home and seek to leave the country through the normal process of applying for

About 30 of the East Germans who occupied the embassy in Prague have given up their protest and reportedly returned to their homes this week, Bonn government sources said. The Prague protest began at the end of September.

Most of the refugees are reportedly unconvinced by the promises of immunity and fear that they might have to wait several years before their exit visas are approved.

Bonn has repeatedly warned East Germans not to try and use its diplomatic missions as escape cannot be expelled because all Germans are entitled to West German citizenship under Bonn's constitu-

More than 35,000 East Germans have arrived in the West this year in the largest exodus since the Berlin Wall was built in 1961.

East Germany has promised that several thousand more will be allowed to leave before the end of the year, according to Horst Teltschik, (Continued on Page 2, Col. 6)

The Foreign Ministry announced the Romanian chargé d'affaires had been asked to see that the five left West Germany "as soon as possible." It accused the five of "behaving in a manner incompatible with this distriction of the companion of the companio with their diplomatic status."

Jury Awards $100,000 to Redgrave in Boston Suit

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches

BOSTON - A federal jury awarded Vanessa Redgrave $100,000 on Friday in her breachof-contract suit against the Roston Symphony Orchestra, but jurors rejected her claim that the symphony dismissed her for political reasons.

The five-member jury accepted the symphony's contention that a series of concerts in 1982 in which Miss Redgrave was to be narrator were canceled because of militant Zionists' threats of violence against the symphony, not because of the British actress's support for the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Miss Redgrave's lawyer, Daniel Kornstein of New York, bad asked the jury to award $1 million for the violation of her civil rights, plus a minimum of $166,000, the average figure she earned annually in the 10 years before 1982. He said there was a decline in both the quantity and quality of acting offers that Miss Rederave had received after the cancellation.

Strategy Uses Nonnuclear Arms Response

BRUSSELS—NATO's political authorities approved a plan on Friday providing for deep strikes into Eastern Europe with conventional weapons in response to a Warsaw Pact attack, officials said.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization's Defense Planning Council, meeting at the ambassadorial level, adopted a new guideline for a "follow-on force attack," or FOFA. they said. The concept aims to exploit new technology to track and hit enemy reinforcements up to hundreds of miles beyond the East-West border, delaying or preventing them from reaching the battlefield. By reducing enemy force ratios, it seeks to avoid the early use of nuclear weapons by NATO in a Central European conflict. In a recent interview, the NATO

FOFA would exploit the latest surveiliance, communications and data processing techniques to locate targets far over the horizon.

General Rogers stressed that FOFA was not identical with the more far-reaching official U.S. doctrine of air-land battle, which involves controversial pre-emptive strikes and counter-offensives.

MANAGUA — The govern-ment of Nicaragua issued urgent calls Friday for blood donations and stepped up defense prepara-tions to meet what it called a threat of an invasion by U.S. forces.

Honduras Wants U.S. Pact and More Aid in Return for Bases

By Edward Cody Washington Post Service TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras —

The Honduran government has requested a security pact with the United States and a doubling of economic aid in return for its key role in the U.S. military deployment in Central America.

These are the main demands in a pair of documents that Honduras wants to serve as the basis for negotiations with the United States to redefine a relationship that over the last three years has become crucial to the Reagan administration's military policy toward Nicaragua, according to officials involved in the exchanges.

The documents reflect a feeling among leading Honduran Army of-ficers that this close cooperation has left the country exposed politically and militarily without sufficient guarantees from the United States in case of a conflict, Honduran sources said. The attitude has spread since younger officers threw-out General Gustavo Alvarez Martinez as armed forces commander on March 31 and replaced him with General Walter Lopez Reyes. President Roberto Suazo Córdo-va's government asked the United States in July to name a special commission to conduct the negotiations, turning down a suggestion that the U.S. ambassasdor, John D. Honduras considers the arrange ment inadequate given the risks to the country in allowing the United States to hold maneuvers here and in harboring U.S.-backed anti-Sandinist guerrillas, according to a Honduran source.

The United States has upgraded Honduran airfield at Palmerola into a base for U.S. reconnaissance flights in Central America and has built a regional radar surveillance station at Cerro la Mole, near Tegucigalpa. About 1,000 U.S. solers are in Honduras.

India Probes Gandhi Death for Plot

NEW DELHI (AP) — A team of high-ranking police and intelligence officers opened an investigation Friday into a possible conspiracy behind the assassination of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi.

The probe had been delayed by purges of high-level security and intelligence officers following the Oct. 31 killing of Mrs. Gandhi by two members of her security guard who were reported to be Sikhs. The investigation is headed by S. Anand Ram, director of the Central Intelligence Security Force.

Mrs. Gandhi's son, Rajiv Gandhi, who succeeded her as prime minis-Mrs. Canon 8 son, Rajiv Canoni, who successed her as prime man-ter, also ordered an investigation into accusations that prominent mem-bers of his ruling Congress (I) Party instigated attacks on Sikhs in New Delhi following the assassination. Mr. Gandhi flew to Allahabad; 350 miles (564 kilometers) southeast of New Delhi on Friday to deposit an urn containing some of his mother's ashes in the family's ancestral home.

Riot Begins Over One Miner in U.K.

LONDON (UPI) — Rioting erupted Friday in Cortonwood, a roal mining village in northern England, when about 5,000 pickets street to keep one miner from going to work at the pit where Britain's coal dispute was touched off eight months ago. Policemen on horseback were called in to break up the violence after pickets fired air rifles, threw ball bearines and harded bricks and stones into police lines.

A spokesman for the National Coal Board said the board would continue to employ the miner at Cortonwood rather than transfer him to another mine. He returned to work Thursday. An announcement by the coal board of plans to close Cortonwood started the coal strike in March.

The coal board said that 201 miners gave up the strike Priday, bringing to nearly 2,200 the number of strikers who returned to work this week in defiance of the National Union of Mineworkers. The board said the week's back-to-work figures were the best since the strike began and reported 54,000 of Britain's 175,000 miners working and 56 of the country's 175 mines producing coal.

Shuttle Launches Canadian Satellite

CAPE CANAVERAL, Florida (UPI) — The astronauts on the space shuttle Discovery, gaining on two errant satellites in a 17,000-mph (27,600 kmh) race through space, launched a Canadian relay station Friday to make room for the rescue of the first spacecraft Monday.

A communications satellite leased by the navy will be deployed from the shuttle Saturday to clear the way for the retrieval Wednesday of the second of the two satellites stranded in the wrong orbit by rocket failure nine months ago. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration is earning $26 million for launching the two new satellites and $5.5 million for trying to salvage the two misdirected ones.

Because both of the wayward satellites are in orbits about 25 miles higher than the shuttle, the Discovery is moving slightly faster, like a runner on an inside track. The gap of more than 9,000 miles between Discovery and the nearest satellite is being closed at a rate of about 240

Heavy Fighting in Salvadoran Town

SAN SALVADOR (AP) — Airborne troops drove leftist guerrillas out of Suchitoto, an important town north of San Salvador, in an 11-hour battle Friday, a military source reported.

The source, who has been reliable in the past, said that government forces had recovered the town after some of the heaviest fighting in four months. A Defense Ministry communique issued earlier in the day said three national policemen had been killed and eight soldiers, including two helicopter pilots, had been wounded. Helicopters ferried wounded to the military hospital in San Salvador during the day and a hospital official said all the beds were filled.

Three guernila battalions of about 300 men each pushed into the town Washington can do to stop the 27 miles (43 kilometers) north of San Salvador at 3 A.M. The rebels quickly knocked out national police and civil guard posts on the periphery and fought their way into the center of town, the sources said.

JAKARTA (AP) - H.R. Dharsono, a retired general and former secretary-general of the Association of South-East Asian Nations, has been arrested in connection with Moslem rioting that took place last September, a family spokesman said Friday.

Mr. Dharsono, who was reportedly arrested at his home Thursday, was a member of a dissident organization called the Group of 50. The government of General Suharto has questioned more than a dozen members of the group in connection with the riot.

The riot, which claimed 18 lives, was triggered by the arrest of four Moslem youths on charges of assaulting a security officer. About 1,500 people swept through a northern Jakarta suburb, setting fire to buildings

Chris Diamini, the president of the Federation of South African Trade Unions, was held early Friday at his factory in Springs while police carried out a second raid on the organization's offices in Germiston Both towns are east of Joahannesburg.

A spokesman for the United Democratic Front, a multiracial anti-apartheid organization, said Lord McCamel, chairman of the Vaal Civic Association, was also arrested. Tehran Victims Are Hostages to Memory

. Five years ago this month. armed militants seized the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. The final 52 hostages were not released until 444 days later. They have long since scattered. Some got divorced, some had trouble finding jobs. But the memories remain vivid.

William Gallegos, 26, who was a Marine guard at the embassy and currently is job-hunting in his hometown of Pueblo, Colorado, says: "It's like yester-day to me. I doubt it will ever go away."

Barry Rosen, 39, the press attache at the embassy in 1979, is a special assistant to the president of Brooklyn College, where he also teaches Middle Eastern affairs courses. "Iran, to a large degree, is never very far away from me," he says.

The hostages today are a group in name only. "It's not like some alumni organization." said Colonel Leland J. Holland, who was the embassy's chief of security and now commands an army procurement center at Warrenton, Virginia. "We run into each other occasionally but there is no common thread."

Plowing Goes Under As No-Till Grows

Thousands of American farmers have abandoned tilling, the laborious process of turning over the soil to loosen it and to bury harvest residue and weeds before planting. Such traditional plowing leaves the topsoil unto catch or slow rain water. The runoff forms gullies and takes a lot of the newly loosened soil

Instead of plowing the harvest residue under, no-till farmers simply plant beneath it in the spring. No-till greatly reduces erosion and it cuts fuel and equipment costs. But because the residue is a breedingground for insects, the process requires more pesticide.

No-till works best on welldrained, sloping soil — just the kind that is most vulnerable to erosion - and least well on flat terrain that retains a lot of water. Such retained water, and the unturned residue, slow the springtime warming of the soil, retarding germination and lowering crop yields.

No-till farming was practiced on 3.7 percent of the acreage cultivated in the United States last year. Some analysts predict that this will jump to 10 percent by the year 2000. It is the most radical and fastest-growing method of conservation tillage.

One White House official, who spoke Thursday on the condition he not be identified, outlined these basic criteria for the plan, to be developed next month:

• It must be easily understood by the average citizen, so the president can more easily sell his proposal to the nation. • It must be "perceived to be

• It must be "perceived to be fair" to the taxpayers.
• It must reduce income tax rates so that the overall effect to the Treasury, even if deductions are Treasury, even if deductions are eliminated, will be "revenue-neu-

• It must attract immediate, substantial congressional support.
When a reporter expressed skepticism about whether the president really wanted to eliminate "all tax " a senior administration official replied emphatically:

Well, get ready." During his re-election campaign, however, Mr. Reagan ruled out eliminating the interest deduction on home mortgages.

The official, who asked not to be identified, said the president is seeking the simplified tax "because there is a strong feeling on the part of the people out there, and it really is strong, that somehow we're off the track. You can't even pay the taxes you owe the federal govern-ment without going through two or three days of filling out forms and getting tax accountants and lawyers involved. It's just too damn complicated.

He said that "tax simplification" and deeper cuts in government programs would be Mr. Reagan's top domestic priorities during the first year of his second term, superseding other proposals he espoused during his campaign such as school prayer, private school tuition tax credits, a line-item veto for appropriation bills and "enterprise zone" tax breaks for businesses investing in blighted urban areas.

On spending cuts, "we're going to look across the board every-where, except in defense and Social Security," the official said. As examples, he listed possible cutbacks in agriculture programs, reimbursements for providers of health services under Medicare and Medicaid, veterans' programs and military and civilian pensions. The White House expects a bruising battle over the proposed spending cuts. We're getting into programs for the middle class quiring moves for moderation.

Japanese Say a Party Realignment Could Hurt Nakasone

By John Burgess Washington Post Service TOKYO — Commentators here see cracks appearing in the political stronghold of former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, who, despite a conviction on bribery charges last

Mr. Tanaka commands the larg-est of five major factions in the ruling Liberal Democratic Party. His group can make or break prime ministers by lining up with smaller factions, as it has done for the past eight years and is now doing with Mr. Nakasone.

But an apparent split in the Ta-naka ranks came to light during political maneuvering over Mr. Nakasone's efforts to gain renomina-tion as party president. The post carries with it the prime minister-house in Tokyo's Mejiro district, although Mr. Nikaido has denied that he wanted the job for himself. But Mr. Tanaka's reputation as all-powerful was tarnished.

Leaders of the three factions that oppose the Nakasone-Tanaka alliance immediately picked up the ball. Mr. Nikaido, 75, could solve the party's unity problems, they argued, and he should be president. Their efforts died out in a day, at least partly, it appears, because Mr. Nikaido would not run.

Mr. Nikaido's motives remain a mystery. Some analysts speculate that he is anxious to make his mark as he reaches old age. Others point out that he is from Kagoshima pre-fecture, a region noted for its "men of action" in the feudal period.

Like Mr. Tanaka, Mr. Nikaido remains an influential man despite being tainted in the Lockheed pay-off scandal of a decade ago. His continuing appeal there was underlined in December, when he candidate in Japan.

Although Mr. Tanaka is politically unacceptable for another turn as prime minister, he is said to worry that putting in a younger man from his faction would undermine his own standing. The solution is Mr. Nakasone.

"We feel we get the best possible support from the Nakasone faction," said one faction member, Jushiro Komiyama.

Mr. Nakasone survived the chal-lenge mounted by Mr. Nikaido, but his future will be in doubt if Mr. Tanaka can no longer deliver the votes. If Mr. Nikaido broke away and took some votes with him. Mr. Nakasone probably would be doomed as a viable candidate.

With these conflicts in mind, some commentators in Tokyo feel that the new cabinet appointed by Mr. Nakasone will prove unstable. Some are now predicting elections, perhaps Mr. Nakasone's last, next year as the conflicts come out into the open.

SIEMENS

A daily event in European computing: more than 200 people discover the benefits of the Siemens operating system BS2000.

The more widely distributed an operating system is, the more advantages it offers. This is common knowledge among computer users, and the reason is obvious: it is more worthwhile to generate software for an operating system with many users. And by the same token, a wide range of software gains more users for the operating system.

Freedom to grow

The Siemens operating system BS2000, currently in use in many parts of Europe, not only encourages such a development, but also guarantees any investment made in software products. When an enhancement of computer facilities, or simply an increase in computer power, is made, software investments are only safeguarded if the operating system remains the same. This is the point about BS2000; it covers the full performance range of our state-of-the art 7.500 series of general-purpose computers, a total hardware program of 10 different models, from medium-sized machines for new installations to the very largest ever developed and produced in Europe.

Real efficiency

BS2000 is also widespread because it is efficient. Diebold, the American statistical research organization, has determined that BS2000 generates 40 percent lower operating expenses than other comparable operating systems, whether staff, system maintenance or training costs.

There are currently over 2,600 computer installations running under BS2000 today. A base of this size, with its daily increasing number of users, demonstrates quite clearly that for BS2000 the future is already here.

Even Poor Art Offers Valuable Insights

By Michael Gibson untional Herald Tribune

PARIS — German painting from the second half of the 19th century is easy to categorize as poor or even unacceptable today.

It appears to be dominated by a ental force of realism in the line of another condemned manner: the pumpler or academic artists of France as characterized by people like Bongerean or Gérôme.

This is a judgment that the exhibition "Symboles et Réalités" at the Musée de Petit Palais (to Jan. 13) is not likely to upset. But there are some interesting artists in the lot and even the heavy, comy stuff is intriguing, perhaps not as art but as a cine to how people's minds worked at the time.

Much of the evolution of art during the past century is one to a shift in its function — a shift brought about by the invention of photography and, above all, cinema. Before movies existed, people went to art exhibitions to compare their own standards with those expressed in works of art.

A painting was often the object of strennous debate. For instance, Fritz von Uhde's "The Path to Bethlehem" (1890) aroused great indignation because it depicted Mary and Joseph as an ordinary peasant couple walking away from the viewer down a minddy village

The sort of social debate that once surrounded paintings of this kind is now directed at movies. When we see something like Wim Wenders's "Paris, Texas," part of the film's attraction comes from the model of human relationships it provides - between a father and a boy he abandoned some years before, between a man and the wife he once left.

We would hardly approve of ing in this way today — but in an age when no movies existed, many a painting of which we disapprove filled a need. It is a need that still exists although we seek to satisfy it in a different way.

Realism was one of the touchstones of German art at the end of the last century - just as, with Courbet and others, it was in France. But German realism seems to have had its roots in the protes tant mentality of Germany, while in France it was the expression of a secular, anti-Catholic movement. Courbet was, in fact, much admired in Germany before the Franco-Prussian war and the catalog ty vs. symbol is in fact the echo of a becomes apparent when one looks much more fundamental theologi-cal debate. Ruskin, in the same urinating skeleton, which seems all cal debate. Ruskin, in the same period, was asserting that the artist's business is to reproduce the visible aspects of reality as accurately as possible in order to give due praise to the Creator. The "protestant," bourged alist stance was imminent and ethical, the "Catholic" aristocratic and symbolist attitude implied a transcendence and at least potentially a mystical outlook. These are merely convenient patterns and there naturally had to be some crossinfluence, but there is a degree of truth to them.

Some of the most interesting work in the show is by the engrav ers. One of these is Max Klinger (1857-1920) whose remarkable sequence, "The Glove," is rightly famous. It seems to foreshadow surrealism - not so much because of the pterodactyl that in one of the last pictures crashes through a window and carries off a fetish glove in its beak - but because of the subtle oddities of the first scenes, which take place on a roller-skating the odder merely because it is done in oil on canvas.

Another excellent artist, Käthe Kollwitz (1867-1945), is represented in this show by some engravings of the sequence devoted to the peasant uprisings that Martin Lu-ther condemned and encouraged the princes to crush. Kollwitz's powerful prints, engraved between 1903 and 1908, are a statement of sympathy arising out of a modern reappraisal of these events. Expressionism is already present in such works, and Kollwitz clearly deserves to be better known.

Arnold Böcklin (1827-1901) is famous for such paintings as the Isle of the Dead," which is not shown here. He is a painter who deserves a show of his own --- a romantic figure and a symbolis who did not indulge in the sort of solitary egotism that marks much of the symbolist work of this period. There are some good works here, but not his best.

Ferdinand Keller (1842-1922), is

And finally, some mention should be made of Franz von Sind (1863-1928), a noted teacher Kandinsky, Kiee and Albers were among his pupils. Stuck present the typical turn of the century view of Woman as a Perilons Creature One painting. "The Sphinx," shows a woman lying with raised head and curved, claw-like fingers. She stares enignatically into the figtence. Another is titled "Vice" and depicts the sinful, grimning creature as she writhes playfully on the floor in the folds of a lunge black snake.

Just as there are different expertations that apply to engraving and to oil painting, there are different ones that apply to painting and to poetry. Oscar Wilde's "Salome" or Huysmans. "La-bas," dealing with essentially the same subject, by no means appear to be as dated as von Stuck's moralizing canvases. But is part this is due to the fact that they do not moraliza.

Art Museum on Rails Visits Out-of-the-Way Towns

riosity, she said, adding that members of the crew that had it usually stop in to see the unusual cargo. Furthermore, she said, local art programs often spring up after the Artrain leaves.

The underlying philosophy of the museum is that it is, for many freight trains on a siding at the people, their first art experience. At every stop, the train's arrival is preceded by visits to local schools by volunteers, who also serve as train guides. A local working artist is usually brought on board to speak with visitors, and two professional artists, Ann Danforth and Bart Brat, travel with the train.

Because of the narrowness of the 'galleries." the exhibitions are shielded behind thick panes of laminated glass set in vibration-absorbent frames to prevent chipping. Paintings are left on the walls in travel, but sculpture must be disassembled and boxed for every move.

A diesel motor operates constantly to keep gallery temperatures at 70 degrees to create proper humidity. At each stop, burglar and fire alarins are connected to local police and fire departments. Apart from that, the cars look much like any museum.

The Artrain, conceived by the Michigan Council for the Arts, is run by a nonprofit organization di-rected by John J. Hohmann. Its Texas tour is supported by grants from the Moody Foundation of Galveston, the Meadows Foundation of Dallas and the William Stamps Farish Fund of Houston. Time for Tax Reform

If President Reagan wants to make good on his campaign promise to simplify the U.S. tax put their money where it would provide the code, he has to move quickly. In his postelection press conference, he repeated that he has yet to consider, much less decide on, any of the ideas being developed by his Treasury Department. But opposition to reform is building among the numerous interests that guard every nook and cranny in the tax code.

Part of that opposition is coming, at least for the moment, from disgruntled Democratic leaders who see tax reform as a disguise for the tax hikes Ronald Reagan swore he would never support. But tax reform doesn't necessarily mean a tax boost for the average taxpayer however welcome new tax revenue would be. The president went too far when he asserted that a tax simplification plan could ensure that no individual would have his taxes raised. But a simpler system could ensure that groups of taxpayers at various income levels end up paying the same average amounts.

In fact, one of the best tax simplification plans devised to date would achieve that general result. Its authors are Senator Bill Bradley and Representative Richard Gephardt -Democrats. The Bradley-Gephardt plan, like the one sponsored by Republicans Robert Kasten and Jack Kemp and the one apparently under development at the Treasury, would eliminate most deductions, exemptions and preferences. But, in return for relinquishing these tax breaks, taxpayers would be rewarded with much lower rates on their total income. This simplification promises substantial greatest economic return - rather than where it would produce the biggest tax break. In time, that should help economic growth and produce more revenues. Most taxpayers would no longer have to pay for help in filing their returns. Lower tax rates would reduce the incentive for ontright cheating. And everyone would feel better about paying taxes knowing that others were also bearing their fair share.

Of course, some individuals would be worse off. Although transition rules would generally allow taxpayers to claim preferences for past investments, people who currently shield almost all their income from taxation would ultimately end up paying a higher average rate. Other people, who take very little advantage of current loopholes, could reap substantial tax savings. Whether the system is "fair" or not. however, won't depend so much on whether a specific deduction is eliminated, but on whether taxpayers at each income level end up paying a larger or smaller share of the income tax burden. And that will depend crucially on how the new system of tax rates is constructed.

The price of getting the many benefits of tax reform will be the public's agreement to wean itself from all special tax breaks and benefits. Worthy as their original objectives may have been, these preferences together distort the economic system and undermine its public morality. Winning that public agreement will be a true measure of the president's leadership.

A Miracle Man in Chile

Chile's President, Augusto Pinochet, seems to be fashioning the political miracle that eluded his elected predecessors: uniting Chileans from left to right in favor of basic political change. Unfortunately for General Pinochet, the first change they seek is the end of his military dictatorship.

The general appears not to appreciate this new phenomenon. His imposition of a new state of siege is simply more of the old repression, a further demonstration of his distance from his countrymen.

The Pinochet regime last year weathered a burst of protest organized by a center-left coalition. In a skillful display, the general then mixed concessions and repressions to divide the opposition. The key move was appointing Sergio Onofre Jarpa, a right-wing civilian, to be interior minister and de facto prime minister. Mr. Jarpa promised conciliation and an early election of some kind.

This week Mr. Jarpa and his entire cabinet tried to resign, recognizing that General Pinochet had repudiated all compromise and was in fact vowing to keep himself forcibly in power until at least 1989.

One direct consequence is that leadership of a new wave of protest now comes from a leftwing coalition that includes the Communist

General Pinochet seems to think he can survive as before, by appealing to anti-Com-munist fears, in Chile and in Washington. Somehow he talked Mr. Jarpa and his colleagues into returning to the cabinet. But Chile's middle classes have suffered through so much recession and repression that they may forget the fear of radicalism - aroused by the short-lived Allende government - and follow almost any protest, no matter how led.

The Reagan administration has deplored the general's repressive turn, perhaps sensing that his tactics are playing into Communist hands. Congressional Democrats have been calling on the United States to further distance itself from the Santiago regime. It's time for General Pinochet to realize that he has become isolated as never before. The old tricks aren't working so well and if he's counting on miracles, he may be in for the greatest one imaginable — a Chile united, against him.

It's the Ultimate Junket

NASA has invited Senator Jake Garn, the chief arbiter of its funds on the Senate Approprintions Committee, to go for a ride on the space shuttle. There've been enough astronauts sent to the Senate, so what's wrong with a senator into s

Exactly that. It was their careers as astronauts that gave Jack Schmitt and John Glenn entrée to the Senate. If being shot into space can make a novice more electable to Congress, it will surely boost an incumbent politician into a third term and beyond. Mr. Garn, a 52year-old Utah Republican, must stand for reelection in 1986.

A free ticket into space is a gift that can put a politician right into orbit. NASA knows its value to the cent. It has offered the same gift to the chairmen of the three other congressional committees that oversee its budget. Well aware of legislators' proclivities for free travel to exotic places, it knows that few will turn down the ultimate junket. And how could anyone consider a junket so publicly conferred a bribe? But that's what it is.

When NASA's request for its $8-billion space station comes before them, would an astronaut-chairman disqualify himself? Not at all. With the stars still in his eyes, he'll swear he isn't in any way influenced by the voyage to the heavens or his debt to the people who brought him safely back. He'll just vote NASA the money anyway.

If the space station is such a good idea, why does the agency resort to such means of per-suasion? The reason is that NASA is a group of brilliant engineers in search of an idea. Their machines are wonderful, but they don't know what to do with them. THE ADOLLO VOYAL es lo line diooti wete a spectacular success, but in trying to repeat it, NASA has become obsessed with manned space flight. It gambled its future on the space shuttle, a beautiful machine that does almost nothing that expendable unmanned rockets couldn't do more reliably and cheaply. There's only one task for which the shuttle is essential: ferrying people to a manned space station. So NASA has had to push for a manned space station, at a cost of at least $8 billion, to justify the shuttle. And what would the space station do that unmanned space platforms won't do more reliably and cheaply? Nothing much.

But it could give rides to the 41 senators and representatives on the four committees that oversee NASA's budget. Also to the schoolteacher that a campaigning President Reagan promised to send into space, and anyone else that future campaign stunts will require. That's no mere space station up there. It's a junketeers' hotel to keep politicians in office and NASA in business.

Is space just a carnival and NASA its barker? If Mr. Garn believes there are serious goals to pursue there, he'll keep his feet on the ground and tell NASA to go fly a kite.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Other Opinion

Viewing the Election

Clearly, the landslide is a mandate for Mr. Reagan personally, for the cheery sense of optimism that he has rekindled among a large majority of white Americans, If he maintains the healing tone of his victory statement, 'Four More Years' could extend that optimism as well to blacks, who were damaged by the first Reagan administration and voted accordingly. The President steadfastly has insisted that he was misunderstood in his attitude toward civil rights and other black interests. He now should act decisively to prove his sincerity and close the nation's bitter racial division.

1909: The Unliberated Décolletée NEW YORK - Madame Tetrazzini, the famous prima donna, is the latest victim of the inquisitorial methods of the Customs authorities in New York. When she arrived here last week, all her evening dresses were detained on the ground that they were stage costumes and were therefore dutiable. Yesterday the singer, protesting that the dresses were merely intended for evening wear, made a personal visit to the Customs officials and begged for the release of at least one dress in order that she might be in a position to attend the opening night at the Opera. The officials were obdurate, saying that nothing would induce them to liberate a décolletée dress without payment.

1934: Priority to French Economy PARIS — Following the tension precipitated by the resignation of the Doumergue govern-ment, calm judgment returned to the French Parliament and with it came support for the new French cabinet. In this favorable atmosphere, Pierre-Etienne Flandin, the new Premier, named Ministerial committees to suggest measures for dealing with the present crisis. These committees were charged with submitting plans for relieving the economic situation, public works for the relief of unemployment, and restrictions of foreign labor in France. The program indicates that Mr. Flandin's first care will be the economic situation, and not the controversial subject of constitutional reform.

A Moral Duty Among Nations

ROME — In addition to all the problems of politics, logistics and money, the disastrous famine in Ethiopia is a moral problem for people who aren't hungry.

There are a lot of very ugly man-made complications added to the natural disaster of drought, and therefore some hard choices.

The first essential point for the United States and its friends is that starving people have to be fed when there is abundance elsewhere. That simple duty must override all considerations of blame for the calamity, interest or anticipated advantage.

The reason lies in the purpose Western societies set for themselves, western societies set for themselves, to make a decent life possible for anybody. Regardless of what other countries including Ethiopia do or fail to do, it would betray the essence of what we consider Western civilization not to respond to such overwhelming need.

That said it is also necessary to know just how cruel and cynical are the obstacles in the way of the natural humanitarian urge to help. Ethiopia has just now signed an agreement to facilitate U.S. deliveries worth $60 million. There is still an opportunity here to test Soviet-bloc assertions of willingness for peaceful cooperation with the West and concern for the welfare of the suffering.

The regime of Chairman Mengistu Haile Mariam recently celebrated its tenth anniversary in power, spending something over $100 million on festivities although hundreds of thousands of its people were already starving. It has created an Eastern style monopoly Communist Party, with important organizational help from East Germany and Bulgaria. Ethiopia hasn't become quite a full member of the Soviet bloc, but it sent an observer to the last meeting of the

Therefore, the Eastern countries have substantial political influence.

Now, it is seeking to control for its own purposes the flow of food that a passionate world is trying to send

Reports that have come to the World Food Council and other international food organizations here show three major elements in the Ethiopian government's surly behavior. One is to use the famine to weaken rebellious forces in the civil wars in Eritrea and the provinces of Wollo, Tigre and Ogaden. A second is to gain money and use aid to gain influence. A third is bureaucratic in-fighting and incompetence typical of authoritarian regimes.

Here are some examples: Ethiopia has been charging an import tax of $12.50 a ton for gift food, plus handling and trucking charges of $165 a ton, which go to the state-run dockers and transport organizations. One international religious relief group, unable to pay these costs on top of buying the food and getting it to Ethiopia, asked the government if it could bring in its own trucks to distribute the gifts. After some besitation, the answer was yes, on condi-tion that all the vehicles be

They pick up the spindly-legged, swollen-bellied people who have been march-ing for days in search of food, carry them out to the middle of nowhere. and dump them. Children have taken to lying in the roads to prevent the units moving on. The patrols have learned to throw scraps of food on the roadside, so the children will scramble for it and get out of the way. In one town in the southwest, where there is famine but no guerrilla war, villagers who had walked for five days seeking succor were made to wait another three days while two Ethiopian organizations argued over which should be the one in charge of opening a local warehouse and distributing stocks. In some areas, food is given only to members of the Communist-run peasants organization, provoking violent retaliation by non-

It is clear that distribution must be internationally supervised. The Ethi-opian regime is neither willing nor able to handle it reasonably. Now that the West is pouring in help, the Soviet countries have also started to send planes and trucks to get the food where it is needed. They are in a position to require Ethiopia to renove the obstacles.

This is a human emergency where East-West cooperation should be possible if it is possible anywhere. The West has the food, the East has the political weight. The United States should propose a coordinated effort to Moscow and its allies. It would save a lot more lives. If the Soviets refuse, they would bear direct responsibility. What can be done must be done, but the world should know who is trying despite outra-geous conditions and who puts poli-tics first. And if there can be an accord, it would honor both sides.

The New Reality in American Politics

NEW YORK — Exit polls con-firmed what any number of voters had been telling reporters throughout the campaign - that nance of the New Deal and its sucthey considered Ronald Reagan a strong leader who deserved credit for the fact that the economy had recovered and flourished in his administration. That's hard to beat and would have been for any Democratic challenger. But Walter Mondale compounded his inherent problems by insisting on a tax increase to cope with a deficit that few people considered a personal threat; and by focusing on the plight of minorities and the poor, about whom the rest of us apparently are in no mood to shed many tears. History, as Mr. Mondale suggested in his post-election news conference, may therefore "deal kindly" with his campaign; the voters certainly did not. Only one president before Mr. Reagan — Richard Nixon in 1972 — ever carried 49 states; the way in which that preference and Mr. Reagan's electoral total was reinforced by his and his mansurpassed even those of Mr. Nixon agers' mastery of television — the and Franklin Roosevelt in 1936. new reality of American politics, Was something happening other than the re-election of a strongly positioned president over a candidate who miscalculated his campaign?

The evidence so far does not suggest — to me, at least — party realignment. Republican losses in the Senate and unimpressive gains in the House and state governorships; the fact that only two years Democrats dominated TV during ago, with the economy down, the Democrats won 28 House seats; the clear likelihood that they can regain as Mr. Mondale's running mate; the Senate in 1986; and the considerable doubt whether any other Re- first television appearance of the Reagan's triumph — all argue completely controlled, to his bene-against the kind of party realign-fit, by his skilled managers and ment that ushered in the long domi-

CESSOTS.

Besides, if an apparently strong economy was a major factor in the Reagan victory - and all polls I've seen suggest that it was - then a downturn might quickly make the Democrats look at least momentarily more attractive, as it did in 1982. And for a second Reagan term, the economic future seems more uncertain than usual, with high real interest rates, unemployment still above 7 percent, a record trade deficit, the unsolved foreign debt crisis and a Congress probably deadlocked on how to deal with massive federal budget deficits.

If realignment seems doubtful, voters' smashing preference for what they saw in Mr. Reagan was not. The remarkable size of his victory, in my judgment, owes much to the way in which that preference the eye through which voters now see most of what they know about a presidential campaign.

Mr. Mondale appeared to have a chance at victory on only two fleeting occasions — during and just after the Democrats' July convention in San Francisco, and after the first Reagan-Mondale debate. The reasons, I think, are clear: The and that debate was Mr. Reagan's publican could have come near Mr. campaign in circumstances not

This is not to suggest that Mr. Reagan won only because of television or because of his amiable demeanor. Nor did the voters consider him a strong leader only because of what they saw on television; that probably dates back at least to when he fired striking air controllers. But the Reagan campaign knew exactly how to reinforce that sion by its adroit projection of him through the most powerful political instrument yet developed; and in him they had the best television candidate presidential politics has yet seen. Not only the Republicans' adver-tising but Mr. Reagan's appearances in news spots and at staged campaign events were meticulously planned and carried out to suggest America's back" because of Ronald Reagan; a vigorous and appealing personal presence was surrounded by smiling faces, waving flags, happy workers, prosperous people, homely scenes — not false images but images carefully selected to underline unbeat themes. Even non-campaign events like the D-Day commemoration and American victories at the Olympics were expertly adapted to underline Mr. Reagan's political leadership. Only in the debates was he left on his own, and his personal performance. mance in the second was strong enough to counter his weak showing in the first.

There's no point deploring or denigrating any of this or wishing television would go away; it won't. The Republicans' use of it was not a perversion of politics but a realization of opportunity; and future candidates in both parties will be learning from the Reagan campaign about how to use it most effectively. They'd better.

Israel is concerned, and rightly so, that hostile groups in Lebanon may renew attacks on border communities in the Galilee, in northern Israel, after the withdrawal.

The main enemy in southern Lebanon is, ironically, not the Palestinians or the Palestine Liberation Organization but a new enemy that Israel has created for itself - the Shiite population of Lebanon, which tends to see the Israeli soldiers in Lebanon as an occupation force.

The number of casualties caused by Shiite attacks on Israeli forces now far exceeds those caused by PLO attacks on Israel before the war. There is concern now that Shiite attacks on Israel will continue after the withdrawal and will be directed across the Israeli border.

On the question of security, the Israelis face a serious contradiction: the longer they stay in southern Leb-

A second reason for the delay of the withdrawal stems from the Israeli wish to reach a new agreement with Syria — an agreement not to move southward after the withdrawal and to prevent anti-Israeli terrorist activities from southern Lebanon. The Is-

It is There is, however, an essential difference between the situation now and in 1976. Eight years ago, President Hafez al-Assad of Syria was willing to reach a tacit understanding with Israel because he wanted his army to be allowed to enter Lebanon undisturbed, and because he wanted to prevent an Israeli invasion of Lebanon. Today, Syria is a recognized presence in Lebanon and no longer faces significant opposition from Israeli forces. The U.S. attitude is also different: Washington is no longer eager to mediate, fearful that it would have to pay a high price to both sides or might fail once again in its role. All this makes it quite clear that any new agreement for redrawing the demarcations of military influence in Lebanon would exact a heavier price from Israel today than it did in 1976.

This is one of the consequences of the unfortunate war of 1982. Nevertheless, an agreement can be reached, but not without U.S. mediation. The main reason is that all sides anon, the greater the chance the at-tacks by hostile Shiite groups will continue even after the withdrawal will result in a new rapprochement Why? A Case for Optimism in Foreign Policy

NEW YORK — Events — at home, not abroad — have made me optimistic about America's potential for playing a more useful, constructive, humane and effective role in the world. The reason for this optimism isn't that Ronald Reagan won or that Walter Mondale lost. It is that the campaign forced both to talk surprising sense about some of our most intractable foreign policy problems. Take terrorism. President Reagan once said it was a problem with a simple solution: "swift and sure retaliation." Yet in the last debate, he sounded almost dovish in arguing that it made no sense killing thousands of innocent people in Beirut in an attempt to punish a handful of terrorists whose identities the Central Intelligence Agency did not know. The most important foreign policy change the election forced on him concerns the relations the United States has with Moscow and nuclear arms control. Whereas Mr. Reagan previously called the Soviet Union an evil empire," now he speaks of nuclear arms control as his major objec-

Election year changes weren't limited to Mr. Reagan, Mr. Mondale emphasized his commitment to America's strength so often it sometimes seemed that he, not Mr. Reagan, was the hawks' candidate. Political expediency no doubt explains these permutations - indeed, that is what gives grounds for optimism. Both Mr. Reagan and Mr. Mondale are astute politicians; their foreign policy politicking revealed an emerg-ing grassroots consensus on what the center of foreign policy should be.

There are three main elements in this nascent consensus. The first, which not only the Reagan victory but Mr. Mondale's emphasis on America's strength reflected, is that most Americans, not just Reagan Republicans, want America to remain a najor force — a strong nation that keeps its commitments.

By T.D. Allman

The second element, which the president's electoral tactics reflected, is that, however serious the Soviet "threat" may be, the threat of a nuclear Jonestown is even greater and that real progress toward arms control is an absolute necessity.

The third — far less certain — element, which Mr. Reagan's electoral emphasis on non-military solutions in Central America and the Middle East also reflected, is that most Americans really have come to sense that American military intervention in the Third World neither helps nations there nor serves our national

Does this mean we may finally be moving toward a foreign policy based on what America can and cannot achieve? It would be absurd to predict that the next four years won't see instances of American arrogance in the Third World — and would be wildly over-optimistic to suggest that some unprecedented breakthrough in American-Soviet relations will occur. It nonetheless is useful to ask what the talk about a Reagan "mandate" really means for foreign policy. Was the president given a mandate to invade Nicaragua? A mandate for "Star Wars" and unlimited confrontations with the Russians?

Despite the election landslide, political suppleness does not change the fact that Mr. Reagan carries ideologiall, human rights or otherwise? The cal baggage the cold war. But the good news is that there clearly exists an unexpectedly broad basis of support for a foreign policy consensus built on America's continuing commitment to its treaty ob-ligations, on the avoidance of miliaffairs of Third World nations, and, most important, on the need for progress toward control, and eventual climination, of the threat of a nuclear holocaust.

Much - perhaps even the prospects for the nation's survival - will depend on whether Mr. Reagan remains as sensitive to the public's real foreign policy priorities as political expediency forced him to be in the campaign.

The writer is author of "Unmanifest Destiny," a study of illusion in American foreign policy. He contributed this comment to The New York Times.

Rights in Taiwan

Regarding the opinion "Pressure for Human Rights Is the Realistic Policy" (Oct. 26) by Orville H. Schell:

Jimmy Carter's "human tights" policies have been debated for six years now, and neither the critics nor the apologists have managed to address the most telling point. The short circuit in the policy, rendering it hypocritical and laughable, was the selectivity in its application. Why, for example, was the rug pulled out from under the Chinese government on Taiwan in order to recognize that on the mainland, with no concessions at d baggage.

Truth and Shame Regarding the report "Fabius to Shun French Soviet Fête" (Oct. 24): How touching that the French tary intervention in the internal Communist Party suspended rela-

I don't suppose they detected any cynicism in their ability to see the human rights of a fellow Frenchman being violated by the Ka-bul regime and its Soviet masters while ignoring the much larger and more tragic continuing violation of the rights of the entire Afghan people by these same two parties. Taiwan Economy May Be Blueprint for China's Growth

By ARTHUR N. WALDRON

Thy are so many people becoming so confident that China is on the verge of becoming an economic anerpower? That "with its new economic reforms and impending absorption of Hong Kong" it will, as The New York Times recently reported a Southeast Asian planner as believing, "eventually outstrip Japan"?

This is not an easy question, given China's rather dismal economic record to date. But the answer is probably found in an comparison of the vast Chinese mainland and the smaller ethnic Chinese states on her periphery that have done so well. But is this a valid comparison?

The economic transformation of some areas with Chinese populations in the last 25 years has been stunning. At the end of World War II, Hong Kong was a slum with a colonial venser, Taiwan a heavily bombed, dirt-poor island already overcrowded and about to absorb some two million refugees, and Singapore was entering a violent and difficult period. Novelists like Graham Greene or Paul Theroux would have felt at home in

A few years ago when a (very bad) film was made of Mr. Theroux's book, "Saint Jack," which is set in Sngapore, only one street could be found still run-down enough to serve as a backdrop, and even then gleaming skyscrapers intruded in many shots. Taiwan's economic growth set records. in Hong Kong wealth grew and spread, so that today a substan-tal middle class lives in a city with better roads and subways than New York.

It is hard not to think that one contributing factor to the success of all these places is their Chinese population: hardworking, thrifty, family-oriented, hungry for education, eager for opportunity and just like the Chinese on the mainland.

When compared to the smaller, high-performance economies of Hong Kong, Singapore and Taiwan, China's economy seems lumbering and slow. But it is not hard to believe that while its takeoff will be longer and slower, its range and capacity ultimatespecial leb. and no long a segment and one of the ly will far outstrip theirs.

Behind this lies the assumption that cultural, or even racial character is a key factor in economic development. One might think this self-evident. After all, the Chinese have done better economically than people in Malaysia and Indonesia.

HE shelf of academic books that attribute Japanese, Korean, and other Asian economic success to culture - the legacy of Confucianism, for instance, which stresses harmony and learning — is growing in length. One can't dismiss this out of hand. A culture that emphasized book-learning is probably better prepared for the age of technology than one that concentrated on perhaps equally difficult but less transferable skills.

But is this really the lesson of Asian economic growth? One may doubt it. It is often forgotten that in Taiwan, whose case is most relevant to evaluation of the Chinese mainland, economic growth was slowing in the 1950s. Investment was virtually stagnant from 1953 to 1957 and travelers to Formosa, as it was then often called, were rarely impressed.

The island broke decisively out of the downward trend only in 1963 and study of how this was achieved suggests that governmen policies, rather than cultural traits, made the difference.

According to a study by development economist Ian M.D. Little, Taiwan in the 1950s was in certain respects a microcosm of the China that faced it across the straits. The government and pary that ruled in Taipei had, like the one in Beijing, borrowed much from the Soviet political model.

Argentina Set Back On Credit

Loans by Banks Are Downgraded

By Clyde H. Farnsworth
New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — Federal

bank regulators have classified some loans to Argentina as "sub-standard," a step that might in-crease bank resistance to granting fresh credits and delay final ap-proval of an International Monetary Fund program of emergency financial aid, federal officials say.

Last Sept. 25, Argentina and the IMF announced agreement on an austerity program that was to lead to $1.4 billion of IMF credits over 15 months. But the action was conditional on a flow of fresh money into Argentina from the commercial banks and a stretching out of nearly half of its foreign debt.

According to New York banking sources, Argentina initially asked for $5.5 billion from the banks. The banks were offering $2.5 billion. The banks are hoping to encourage Argentina to get more money from the public sector.

With $44.4 billion owed to foreign creditors, Argentina is the world's third-largest debtor, after Brazil and Mexico.

Because inflation in Argentina has run higher than expected, the IMF has had to reopen discussions with the government of President Raul Alfonsin over the specifics of wage policy, monetary growth, and other elements of an austerity program agreed to in September.

The downgrading of the banks' loans to Argentina was done by the Country Exposure Review Committee, an interagency panel that represents the Federal Reserve Board, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

They acted under the mandate of the 1983 International Lending Supervision Act requiring that commercial banks be given notice of risks in foreign lending.

"Consolidating the financial package now presents a tricky chal-lenge," said William R. Chine, a senior fellow at the Institute for International Economics.

A number of officials said that bank executives might fear it would be more difficult to justify new Argentine credits to stockholders and

Wacker Builds Business on Silicon

By Warren Getler International Herald Tribune BURGHAUSEN, West Germany - The basic material of half the computer chips sold in the West today comes from Wacker-Chemitronic GmbH. the world's leading producer of the highly purified compound, polycrystalline silicon, from which semiconductor waters are

If it were not for Chemitron-If it were not for Chemitron-ic's ability to rapidly expand pro-duction of so-called "poly" by 30 percent this year, the Western world's booming semiconductor industry could have faced a po-tentially paralyzing shortage of the chemically generated materi-al. Semiconductors, those finger-nail-sized chips containing as nail-sized chips containing as many as 1.5 million electronic transistors, are what run computers, calculators, missile guid-ance systems and thousands of other electronic products.

"We were the only ones who prevented a collapse of material supply for the world semiconductor industry," said Werner Freiesleben, president of Wacker-Chemitronic, a subsidiary of the Wacker-Chemie GmbH chemical group of Munich. Half of Wacker-Chemie, is owned by the Wacker family and the other half by the giant West German chemical concern, Hoechst AG. Chemitronic, based in the 18th-century border town of Burghausen near Salzburg, Austria, finds itself in a particularly strong position to benefit from the boom in semiconductor sales because it has not only the technical capacity to make polysili-

con in large quantities but also the means to convert that material into high-quality wafers upon which minute and highly compact integrated circuits can be inscribed

Consequently, Chemitronic is able to sell polysilicon to its ma-jor wafer-making competitors which have only limited polysilicon production capacities. In ad-dition to capturing nearly half of an estimated 5,000 tons of Western demand for polysilicon this year, Chemitronic sold about one-third of the Western world's volume of polished waters, Mr. Freiesleben said.

"Wacker's position as both a poly and wafer producer has been a source of strength for them," said Robert Sandfort, vice president of London-based Monsanto Electronic Materials

Co., which is a competitor and a customer of Chemitronic, "But depending on the way technology develops will determine whether that dual position remains a major plus for Wacker, and for Monsanto as well," he As a result of this year's "un-

A kilogram is 2.2 pounds. Chemitronic has refused to sell its poly on the spot market, keeping its price, viewed as a kind of target by the indus-

Producer Prices In U.S. Dropped 0.2% in October

WASHINGTON - Wholesale prices fell 0.2 percent in October, the third straight monthly decline, the Labor Department said Friday. It was the first time in 17 years that producer prices had dropped in three consecutive months.
The Labor Department attributed the decline to lower prices for 1985-model cars and trucks. The cost of the new models were found after seasonal adjustment to be lower than September close-out prices for the 1984 models. Other major components of the index rose, and department analysts said the overall index would not have changed from September if car and truck prices were not counted. Food prices, which had been down in four of the previous five months, rose 0.1 percent. Energy prices were up 1.5 percent. Gasoline prices, after falling for four months in a row, rose 2.5 percent. For the first 10 months of the year, prices have risen 1.5 percent, well below the 5-percent forecast made at the start of 1984. The figure compared with last year's 0.6 percent, which had been the lowest rate in two decades.

Analyzing last month's price report, department specialists said that wholesale costs for 1985-mod-el cars dropped 1.2 percent in October after seasonal adjustment.

Prices for new cars actually rose 5.5 percent. But they would normalfy rise 6.7 percent at this time of year. Prices for trucks registered a

David Healy, an auto industry analyst with the brokerage firm of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., said the October price decline for cars was a "statistical (luke," since the government's seasonal adjustment does not take into account the fact that automakers no longer introduce all their new models at

"Demand for cars is so strong right now that dealers, particularly General Motors dealers after the strike, are short of cars," Mr. Healy said. "I think it's still a tough time to buy a new car and negotiate on price because it's a bit of a seller's As for food, a 14.8-percent jump in fish prices and a 3.7-percent increase in egg prices were partially offset by a drop of 8.2 percent in vegetable prices, a decline of 6.5 percent for fruit prices and a 3.7-percent fall in pork prices. In addition to the sharp rise in asoline prices, fuel oil prices rose

Donald Raiajczak, an economist at Georgia State University, pre-dicted that energy prices are is like-ly to continue to be soft for the next two years.

Along with the prospects for energy prices, analysts point to the continuing strength of the U.S. dollar and the slowdown in overall economic growth as reasons for the wholesale price performance of the past three months.

Overail, wholesale prices dropped 0.1 percent in August and 0.2 percent in September. The three-month string of declines is the longest since a six-month drop that began in October 1966.

SEC Approves 2 New Types Of Investment

By Nancy L. Ross Vashington Post Service

WASHINGTON - The Securities and Exchange Commission has approved two new types of investment. One would involve spending part of a life-insurance premium in mutual funds, and lead to a reduc-tion of the premium if the funds did well; the other could entail investment in several mutual funds with the same management.

Under the first type, approved Thursday by a 5-0 vote, a portion of premium payments would go into one of several mutual funds selected by the policyholder.
Instead of making the same pre-minm payments each month, as in ordinary life insurance policies, the policyholder would have the option of reducing payments if the return from the mutual fund were particularly good.

The other product, the mutual "fund of funds," won approval on a 3-to-2 vote. The minority commissioners, James C. Treadway Jr. and Aulana Peters, asked to submit written dissents.

The controversy centers on reviving, even in a narrow sense, the pyramid-type mutual fund. This type of fund invests in other mutual funds with the same directorship.

The SEC approved an applic tion from Vanguard Group of Investment Cos. to establish a retirement fund that would invest in some of Vanguard's 15 other mutual funds.

The fund of funds would be offered for Individual Retirement Accounts and Keogh accounts. Investors could have equal stakes at one time in funds based on stocks, bonds and money market funds.

The dissenting commissioners argued that Vanguard had not sat-isfactorily demonstrated the economic benefits to customers, or climinated the possibility of conflict of interest when the underlying funds and the fund of funds have the same directors.

But analysts said Exxon's decision to boost its posted prices for heavy domestic crude could trigger similar increases by the rest of the industry. NYSE Prices Drop 9.72 Points NEW YORK — The stock market closed lower for the third day in a row Friday as investors ignored a prominent economist's fore-cast that a decline in interest rates might be around the corner. The Dow Jones industrial average, which fell 4.53 Thursday, dropped another 9.72 to 1,218.79. The Dow gained 27.50 Monday and Tuesday, only to decline 25.18 over the next three days and finish the week with a net gain of Declines and advances were even at 766-766 among the 2,013 issues traded at 4 p.m. EST.

Volume totaled 83.6 million shares, down from the 88.6 million traded Thursday.

The stock market started out higher Friday but then retreated despite a statement from Salomon Brothers economist Henry Kaufman that there is "an even chance" that the Federal Reserve will have to cut the discount rate to keep the economy growing. The discount rate, currently 9 percent, is what banks pay when they borrow money from the Federal Reserve.

"The Fed will have to liberalize the provision of reserves to ensure a rebound in economic activity," Mr. Kaufman said, noting that there have been no signs of renewed economic strength so far in the fourth quarter.

Raiph Bloch of Mosely, Hallgarten Co., Chicago, said "Kaufman told us nothing we didn't already know." Mr. Bloch said the early-week n front of the news."

HAMBURG - West Germany's largest and most modern oil refinery is in danger of being closed in April 1985, according to the re-finery's owner, Mobil AG.

Herbert C. Lewinsky, chairman of Mobil Oil Corp.'s West German subsidiary, said earlier this week that "the prospects for the future of Mobil's Wilhelmshaven refinery have deteriotated considerably. The result is that crude oil process ing at the l billion Deutsche mark ($344.8 million) facility may have to be discontinued as of next April,

AG spokesman, Walter Fickardt, duced demand for oil products and said Friday. He said the company's related persistent overcapacity in management was discussing the fate of the unit and its 300 employces with the workers' council. Efforts to conclude cooperation agreements with outside parties have led nowhere, Mr. Pickardt

Hopes that the refinery would be able to continue its oil proces operations were set back this week when Mobil Sales & Supply Corp., the largest importer of processed crude from Wilhelmshaven, informed Mobil AG of its intention to discontinue imports of oil prod-ucts at the West German refinery

Mr. Pickardt attributed the re-finery's troubles to dramatically repean oil processing business. He said that the unit had posted heavy losses "in the millions of Deutsche marks" in recent years.

"Our refinery was planned around projections made in the early 1970s that oil consumption in million tons by 1984, he said. "Well, actual consumption this year is about half that."

Built in 1975, the refinery was designed for an annual refining capacity of eight million metric tons of oil products. Last year the facility refined only four million tons and this year is expected to process

Wulff, who follows Sun for Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette, said that "Sun's cash machine could easily support a buyout at $70." Moreover, he suggested, the Pew family, which controls a third of the stock through the Glenmede Trust and otherwise, "would probably support it if proposed." Sun does not appear to be an active takeover target. But George D. Baker, who follows the compa-available, although it is not actually on the market." But the subject is played down by Sun. The prepared remarks of Mr. Burtis and other company executives who spoke Thursday to the Society of Petroleum Analysis in New York said nothing about a possible takeover.

Kurt Van Vlandren, a spokesman for Sun, said, "We have no evidence that anybody's accumulating our stock, and we're not for sale."

U.S. Presses Japan to Bar Chip Copying

By John Burgess

Washington Past Service TOKYO — A new U.S. law that protects computer chip designs against unauthorized copying may not protect Japanese designs until Japan takes steps to guard against such copying, a U.S. official told the government here Friday.

The U.S. patent and trademarks commissioner, Gerald J. Mossinghoff, said that he had told Japanese officials that he would recommend that Japanese companies be denied coverage under the law until Japan made a firm effort to guard designs in its home market.

U.S. companies now dominate the international market for chips, which is evaluated at $20 billion per year. The U.S. makers had pushed for the law's protection, to stop the hitherto common practice for producers to copy designs without permission or payment...

Although some Japanese companies have introduced innovative chip designs, some have frequently copied ones developed at great expense in the United States. The Semiconductor Chip Protection Act of 1984 gives chip designs 10-year protection from copying.

It also provides that companies from countries that have similar legislation or are seeking to adopt it tection in the United States and This year's jump in world semi- take action there against violators.

DEEP into Richard Yates's "Young Hearts Crying"—the first novel he has published since
"A Good School" appeared in 1978, and his most ambitious since "The Easter Parade" (1976) meet an unusually interesting character with an unusually interesting literary theory. · He is a minor character named George Kelly, "a blunt-faced, truck-driverly fellow wearing a green work shirt with some company's insignia on its left breast pocket," and his theory is enunciated in a New School writing class that the heroine of Yates's novel, Lucy Davenport, happens to be taking. George Kelly's theory is that "the distinction between strong people and weak people always falls apart under scrutiny anyway, and everybody knows it, and that's why it's always been too sentimental an idea for a good writer to trust." Now, I don't know if Yates himself believes this theory, because on the one hand this Kelly character tions, yet on the other hand the women in this novel are almost invariably stronger than the men, which tends to be the case in most of Yates's fiction. In any case, whether the theory is valid is a problem for a seminar paper, not a daily book review.

But having now finished "Young Hearts Crying," I find myself wishing Yates had taken violent excep-tion to Kelly's theory. I find myself wishing not only that Yates believed in a powerful distinction be-tween strong and weak characters, but also that he accepted the possibility of characters transforming themselves from weakness into strength. The reason I found myself wishing this is that I got so terribly tired of the weakness of Michael Davemport, through whose eyes, alternately with those of Lucy Davenport, the woman who marries him and then leaves him, we see most of the action of this beguil-ingly vivid yet ultimately thresome work of fiction.

We've met characters like Michael Davenport before in Yates's fiction, whose impressive body now constitutes two collections of stories, "Eleven Kinds of Loneliness" and "Liars in Love," along with live novels, the best of which remains his first, the recently reissued "Revolutionary Road." Davenport disdains commerce and lives for art, even though he works for a trade journal to support his habit of writing of poetry.

is deeply dependent on the women who keep growing weary of his self-indulgence. He lives in terror of the mental breakdowns he suffers when they do leave him. He hates psychiatrists and their tiresome cliches. He is threatened by his fear of impotence. In short, he is weak, and he makes a cult of his

We have also met Lucy Davenport before in Yates's fiction. She dabbles at creativity but can't quite make it. She believes in psychiatric therapy, although it doesn't seem to get her anywhere. She is forever being misused by men, but she has the strength to make it on her own. But Michael, who gets the lion's share of the novel, is so appallingly blind to whatever is trou-bling him that we not only come to dislike him eventually, we also begin to wonder if Yates may possibly be ridiculing him. Late in the novel, after Michael has divorced Lucy, remarried and given in to his young wife's desire for baby, there is a scene in which Michael muses for several pages about how umpleasant it is going to be to have the son who has just been born. What if he insisted on being taught how to throw a ball, or was critical of his father's drinking and smoking? "What if he wanted to walk around the kitchen with one hand on his hip, telling his mother about the marvelous time he'd had with his friends last night at a really nice new place in town called the Art Deco?"

threatened by the arrival of a competing male? Is threatened by the arrival of a competing male? Is Yates preparing us for some sort of climactic insight? I'm afraid not Another of George Kelly's aesthetic pronouncements is a disdain for "what used to be called the come-to-realize story," which, he goes on to explain "was a commercial formula that went out of business when the big slick fiction magazines folded up after television came in." Apparently, Yates agrees wholeheartedly.

So neither Michael nor Lucy Davenport come to realize much of anything at the end of "Young Hearts Crying," except that life goes on and maybe they can survive and be tolerably happy in their circular ruts. You want to shake them, particularly Michael, but you realize they wouldn't respond even Michael, but you realize they wouldn't respond even if you could get your hands on them. And what is most infuriating of all is that because of Yases's skill at bringing these people to life, you go right on reading and raging at them.

Zola Budd: A Runner Living on the Run

LONDON - Zola Budd awakes on a rich white man's wine estate in South Africa, no doubt aggrieved that she is pledged not to race today or on any day this year.

She is healthy, she is extremely fit, and we all know by now that although painfully shy and susceptible she expresses herself through barefoot running as few teenagers ever have.

She may also believe she is a sporting tragedy.

Enough people tell her so: They suggest tering at home on a veldt instead of 12,000 miles away in Britain, under whose flag of convenience she competed at the Olympics and which expected her to return for the cross country season among folk and in a climate foreign to her.

Those people place sport too highly on the scale of life's values.

Zola Budd is a sad case of a girl apparently born to run free in a racially divided country where the majority cannot live - never mind compete on the track - on equal terms. No one would deny she faces a soul-de-

Run with her own kind and be ostracized by the outside world or continue the pretence of a second nationality, which has led to being bought and sold as a newspaper commodity and pitched prematurely into ruth-lessly hyped international athletics.

But tragedy? Given time, Budd might re-lect on 25 blacks killed this week in South African townships — making 159 deaths and well over 1,000 opponents of racial segrega-tion detained in South Africa since this little girl became a viable property after officially breaking the world 5,000-metre record last January.

That is tragedy.

And whether this solemn, immature but intelligent university student approves or not, the gift she has and the probability of sporting sanctions continuing through her athletic peak make her a focal point of iniquities into which she was born.

Less inevitable is that, at a time when Budd has been going through the awkward transitions from adolescence to womanhood (which might, incidentally, bring physical change weighing against her on-track advantage), she is hauled through devious political games by entrepreneurs bearing tantilizing gifts.

She needed protecting back in March, when six U.S. universities and agents for politically tinged Italian and British interests flocked like groupies around a pop star. And 1, for one, was convinced she had that protection

Frank Budd, Zola's father, poured his heart out. "We have no plans to come to England at all," he insisted. "I can't see anything happening, certainly not until after the Olympic games. She's not ready to move to a new semp.

"We don't know anything about Britain, but we do know a lot about South Africa. "We would be like the first guy going to the moon, not knowing what we might come across or how it might affect her. We are not yet looking for recognition from the [British] Home Office. She's a good athlete, but it's too early to be talking about moving into world

He repeated again and again that his daughter was 17 — "and a very young 17 at that." They had received U.S. offers, amounting to little more than scholarship money, but he had seen another promising Springbok girl rained by the disorientation of U.S. universi-

Besides, the girl's coach, Fieter Labuschagoe, was adamant that 1988, not 1984, was her year, and Frank Budd, who deplored people trying to make sport a business, reasoned: "We're definitely not looking for what we can get out of this. You can ruin her overnight by taking the wrong sponsorships. We've taken a very quiet one here because we're not out for short term gain."

He detailed her race plans and invited me to call again after the South African championships three weeks later.

Three days after that conversation. Frank Budd, his wife Tossie, and Zola left Bloemfontein telling friends she needed to get away from media pressure and would rest in the mountains. They slipped out of Johannesburg to Amsterdam and switched to a chartered Piper Chieftan plane bound for Southampton in Southern England.

And the London Daily Mail picked up the bills. It had beaten at least one other Fleet Street paper, which discussed an approach at editorial level but never considered the quarter-million-pound (about $315,000) outlay the Mail invested by way of expenses and a trust fund for the runner.

Citizenship was steered through home office channels in 10 days flat on the basis that her paternal grandfather was born a Londoner in 1896 and, although no one of the immediate family had set foot in Britain in 70 years, Frank Budd was entitled to a British ssport and Zola, as a minor, qualified on her father's citizenship. She turned 18 in

From then on, the skeletal-looking 5-foot-2 (1.57-meter) athlete who used to rise at 5.30 A.M. to run with ostrich and impala and springbok was a Page 1 Mail exclusive. The paper declared her pride in competing "for the country I feel is mine."

It denounced as sanctimonious creeps those who "instead of rejoicing that Britain has acquired a middle-distance runner of country, react with snarls of rage."

On rare moments out of Mail custody, Budd came across as intensely withdrawn and either frightened or unwilling to speak for herself. The Mail had tried to sell an interview to the BBC and launched a book on her life and times, and the day after their Solemo and immature, but intelligent.

clared that "the experience in Britain was instructive," she said had decided to stay in South Africa "mainly because I enjoy my athletics here much more."

She reportedly reapplied for a South Afri-can passport hoping "in the coming years to mean something for South African athletics." But all manner of South African sporting voices have been raised against her homecoming, including the pious Gary Player, who is able to earn his golding millions abroad and live in South Africa: "Honor," he says, "is at stake and it would be bad manners for Zola to turn her back on Britain now."

Bad, too, for South African sportsmen seeking loopholes around sanctions. Mean-while the girl whom the Mail assured us was happy in England's green pastures is back with the pets, the familiarity, possibly even the boyfriend her elder sister Estelle revealed she missed. Instead of crying herself to sleep over political attempts to get her to denounce apartheid, she now wonders if she will be llowed to turn back the clock and pretend 1984, with its calamitous collision with her childhood hero, Mary Decker, never hap-

Different voices speak for her now. Her parents have split up and, although she is in daily touch with her partially crippled mother, the father is remote. His comment, "If I could take her back to Britain physically, I would," hardly smoothes the waters.

And time will tell whether she has found the protector she needs. Budd is staying in Stellenbosch with Jannie Momberg, vice president of the South African Amateur Athletics Union.

... He is one of many saying that Rudd the athlete should return to Britain to display god-given talent — but that Budd the person, "distillusioned with people and not happy abroad," requires understanding.

Last week in Cape Town, Momberg met

Nigel Cooper, secretary of the British Amateur Athletics Board. The outcome was an announcement that Budd would not set foot on a South African track and thus jeopardize her international career this year. Meanwhile, Momberg offers a solution. If decathlete Daley Thompson can live temporarily in California and still compete for Britain, why should Budd not reside in her natural South African surroundings and run selected overseas meetings on her British passport? Surprise, surprise: An U.S. sportswear company is waiting to pay travel costs.

Would it further surprise you if the next time Budd competes again it's in Los Ange-les? On Jan. 18, the date of Decker's return (Even). Houston Oilers (0-10) at Kansas City Chiefs (5-5): For the defensecontract expired on Oct. 31, while she de- after that fateful collision in the Olympics?

He led all the way to win the Hollywood Derby by 10 lengths. In the Del Mar Handicap, he set a seemingly suicidal pace — running the first half-mile in 45 seconds flat —and still managed to win in brilliant time.

Then he went to the $500,000 Super Derby at Louisiana Downs, controlled the pace, opened a three-length lead turning for home and was caught at the wire by Gate Dancer. The two horses shattered the track record for 14 miles by more than a second.

Just as Slew o' Gold blossomed at the end of his 3-year-old season, Gate Dancer seems only now to be reaching his peak. Even when competing in the Triple Crown series where he set a track record in the Preakness — he wasn't a terribly impressive racehorse. WASHINGTON — I had no Sooner finished reading my a lame duck president. Since he morning newspaper concerning can't run again, you should be President Reagan's victory over speculating about '88." President Reagan's victory over Fritz Mondale when I got a call from Shorty Courtwright.

Well, what do you think?" he wanted to know.

"It was an awesome victory and personal triumph of unbelievable magnitude," I said. "Reagan's landslide in 1984 is one for the history books."
"I'm not talking about 1984," Courtwright said. "I'm asking you what do you think about 1988?

Buchwald "Frankly, I haven't given much thought to 1988," I admitted. "I'm still trying to figure out the ramifications of yesterday's election."

"That's over," Courtwright said.
"Your readers all want to know what's going to happen four years from now, when Ronald Reagan finishes his second term."

"They do?"
"Of course. You must be aware as well as I am, that once a president is elected the only concern Americans have is who is going to be their next president. How long do you expect us to stay with yes-terday's news?"

"I was going to hold off until Reagan's inauguration before I started writing about 1988," I said. "Do you think that's too long to wait?"

"You're probably right," I said.
"But I've been so busy this morning reading the election results, haven't been able to devote much time to who the next president could be."

That's the trouble with you people in the media. You're all involved in pack journalism. Instead of looking ahead you're still writing stories about Reagan and what he'll do for the next four years."

"It might have some relevance,"

"Possibly to a few people. But the majority of us would rather know who's coming after Reagan. It's going to be a wide-open race in 1988, and a lot more exciting than this year's election.

"Shorty, you may be onto some-thing." I said. "Maybe I ought to give the president credit for carrying 49 states, and then go up to New Hampshire and find out how they're going to vote four years

"I would if I were you. A few exit polls in New Hampshire could de-cide how the wind is going to blow for George Bush and Jack Kemp." Is that how you see the Repub-

"It should be close, because no matter what Bush thinks, Reagan's personal popularity is not transferable to him. And if things don't go right the next four years, Bush could be tarnished with Reagan's administration. How the Age Factor Alters Perception

By Nadine Brozan New York Times Service
NEW YORK --- Offer to introduce a friend to a member of the opposite sex and the first question likely to arise is, "How old is he?" or "How old is she?" Victoria Secunda, the author of a book on the influences of age, says questions such as "Did he lor she] go to college, does he have a sense of humor, is he kind, does he like movies?" would be sound-er predictors of a potential friendship than a birthdate.

"One's chronological age is the least-informative fact about an individual," said Secunda, whose book, "By Youth Possessed: The Denial of Age in America." was recently published. It describes the judgments rendered on the basis of age and the contradiction between the trend toward rushing children into adulthood and then pressuring them into recapturing youthfulness.

"If you say you're 30," Se-cunda said, "people make as-sumptions about you. But all that you have really said is that you have been around for 30 years. How you have used those years and how another person 30 years old has used them may be entirely different. Yet our culture con-cludes that in another 10 years, you'll be headed for inertia and

In Secunda's analysis, the power of those assumptions is almost incalculable, shaping life at al-most every turn from birth through old age. Age hias, she said, begins when the mother of a toddler fears that her child knows fewer words than the child next door, and continues into elementary school, which places 6-yearolds in first grade, no matter what their readiness, and into high school, where students are expected to make decisions about

It continues in adulthood, when lawyers are told that if they do not become a partner by age 40, they probably never will, and into middle age, when the desire to appear young may lead to plas-tic surgery whether warranted or not, and finally into the 60s, when ssure for retirement intensi-

In fact, it was the memory of her own discomfort at feeling out of step as a "late-blooming" teenager that provided the initial impetus for the book, Secunda said. As an adult, she continued to live by her own timetable: marrying at 26, having her daughter at 30 and starting her full-time writing career at 37, the same year she was remarried to Sheldon Secunda, a photographer.

"We don't all grow in lock step, clones of one another," said Secunda, 45, who has no inhibitions about announcing her own age. "If we expect to live close to 80 years, what is the hurry? It is not age per se that makes us crazy; it's how we've been taught to think of it."

Although she concedes that age does offer a tangible marker to the individual's place in the life cycle, it fails to recognize that, at any given time, a person may embody the characteristics of several

"How about a 40-year-old man who decides to leave advertising and enter medical school," she said. "He is divorced, has two school-age children, takes care of his elderly parents and is in love.

"How old is he? Because he's in school, in some way he behaves as if he were 22, and because he's in love, he may feel like a teen-ager. But being a parent and divorced certainly makes him an adult and caring for his parents makes him Secunda advocates reducing the "tyranny of age assumptions." As one example of how that might be done, she said, "In-children in first grade when they are 6 years old, we should admin ister tests that assess their readiness. Children who develop slowly do catch up unless they have a genuine disability, and in the meantime we are giving them the gift of time."

Interviews with sociologists and experts on the life cycle produced mixed reactions to Secunda's ideas, but in general they agreed that age is given too much Edward W. Lehman, professor of sociology at New York Univer-sity, was one who argued that age is an important indicator. "It is a factor in the same way that race, gender, income and level of edu-cation are factors," he said. "We cation are factors," he said. "We know a lot about people because of their age, simply because they are shaped by their experience."

K. Warner Schaie, professor of human development and psychology at Pennsylvania State University, said, "Chronological age offers an explicit index; it is easy to understand. But it is no more a reasonable classification than is sex or race." than is sex or race." In the view of some of the ex-peris, attitudes have already begun to change. "Age norms are in flux," said Kathleen Gerson, assistant professor of sociology at New York University.

Today we are seeing confusion and uncertainty about age, especially in adulthood," she said. "The trend to delayed childbirth is one example of how women have created new age norms to better fit their needs. They're no longer just passive recipients of age norms.

Bernice Neugarten, professor of education and sociology at Northwestern University, agrees that stratification by age is becoming less rigid.

In some ways it is losing its relevance," she said, "and we are living in a society in which age-appropriate behavior is breaking down. We are marrying and remarrying into our 70s and 80s. Occupationally, people are changing their careers in their 40s and 50s in the belief that with lots of years ahead, why not do someng new. Women are going back to college. Now, a 25-yearold can be a mayor and a 60-yearold can be a fust-time father."
